III. FORMULA INDEX

KEY.

In using this index the following should be borne in mind:

1. The Formula Index is supplementary to the Subject Index; in no sense does it replace any part of the latter except that most of the organic compounds that were not named in the original papers are entered in the former only.

2. Inorganic as well as organic compounds have been entered.

3. Entries under their own formulas are made for all strictly inorganic and strictly organic compounds and for the true organic derivatives of organic compounds, both addition compounds and true reaction derivatives (this includes esters, hydrazones, methohalides, oximes, picrates, semicarbazones, etc.). Inorganic salts of organic acids and inorganic addition compounds of organic compounds (hydrohalides, chloroplatinates, perchlorates, sulfates, etc.) are not given separate entries but are indicated in modifying phrases under the formulas of the compounds from which they are derived (under the acid in the case of a salt). Salts of formic, acetic and oxalic acids are exceptions; these are entered as such.

4. The arrangement of symbols in formulas is alphabetical except that in carbon compounds C always comes first, followed immediately by H if hydrogen is also present.

5. The arrangement of formulas is also alphabetical except that the number of atoms of any specific kind influences the order of compounds. E. g., all formulas with 1 C come before those with C₂, thus: CCl₂O, CCl₄, CHCl₃, CHN, CHNO, CH₂Br₂, CH₂O, CH₃Cl, CO, C₂Ca, C₂H₄O₂.

6. The arrangement of entries under any heading is strictly alphabetical according to the preferred names of the isomers.

7. Entries consist of (a) the formula (in bold-face type), (b) the name as it has been entered in the Subject Index (in light-face Roman type; it should be noted particularly that the part of the entry in this type is the exact equivalent of the formula given), (c) occasionally a modifying phrase or word such as "Ca salt" or "hydrochloride" (in italics, different type being used to set off that part of a compound being indexed which is not represented in the formula used; see ¶ 3 above), (d) the page reference and (e) the fraction of the page in ninths (indicated by a small superior numeral) in which the compound will be found.

8. Cross-references are to the Subject Index.

9. Water of hydration is not made a part of the formulas indexed but is usually given in light-face type following the formulas.

10. Polymers having different names and recognized as different substances, e. g., acetaldehyde and paraldehyde, are all entered under their accepted formulas. But definite compounds for which different polymeric formulas are in use are entered under the simplest formula only with cross-references under the polymeric formulas.

11. A straight line, thus —, used under some headings to avoid repetition of names, always stands for the name of the "index compound," i. e., that part of the preceding name (inverted) which comes before the comma.

12. "P" before a page number indicates that the abstract is of a patent.

13. The names beryllium (Be), columbium (Cb) and hafnium (Hf) are given preference over glucinum (Gl), niobium (Nb) and celtium (Ct), respectively, for these elements.

The Key to a formula index is necessarily lengthy. It would not be correct to conclude from this that this index is difficult to use. Experience is to the contrary.

INTRODUCTION.

General purpose and policy. The location of chemical compounds in an index by names is at times uncertain because names vary and in the case of complex compounds may be difficult to ascertain. New compounds are constantly being prepared, which, if named at all, may receive more than one name which is justified from one point of view or another and the possibilities of incorrect names are great. Since the kinds and number of component atoms of a chemical compound are unvarying characteristics the supplementary Formula Index to Chemical Abstracts is published for the purpose of eliminating this element of uncertainty in the Subject Index. Except that many unnamed compounds are no longer entered under the heading "Compound," the Subject Index is in no way altered on account of the Formula Index. In the Subject Index related compounds are grouped rather effectively and to good use by the present system of indexing on the basis of "parent compounds" or more accurately "index compounds"; in the Formula Index the certain location of individual compounds is the primary consideration. The Subject Index is more convenient to use in some respects and it frequently contains more information in the form of modifying phrases. The repetition of modifying phrases in the Formula Index beyond necessary brief phrases to indicate derivatives has been avoided as unnecessary for the accomplishment of the real purpose of this index, as stated above, and as inconsistent with necessary economy. Isomerism is not indicated in the Formula Index in cases in which the names differ only in position numbers or letters but it always is in the Subject Index when known. Ready reference to the Subject Index for the purpose of locating information regarding related compounds is made possible by the use in the Formula Index of names following the formulas written exactly as they appear in the former index.

All new compounds and all compounds for which new data are given have been entered. Most of the compounds have been entered under their own formulas. Some departure from a policy of making separate formula entries for derivatives of all kinds is reasonable and accords with custom. The only departures in this index (see ¶ 3 of the Key) have been in classes of compounds the natures of which would be more than likely apparent to the investigator. The interest in a salt of a complex organic acid, for example, is likely to be mainly in the acid and it is considered more valuable to have the record of it under the formula of the acid for the use of searchers looking up that acid.

In the case of unnamed organic compounds where possible the class, as acid, source and melting or boiling point have been given.

* Cross-references to the Subject Index have been used for all simple inorganic compounds, for all minerals of definite composition and for the organic compounds more commonly met with, in general whenever it seemed likely that users of Chemical Abstracts would predominatingly refer to the Subject Index.

The system. The system, as described in the Key, is, with slight modifications, that worked out by Dr. Edwin A. Hill, and used by the Classification Division of the U. S. Patent Office. This system is preferred to the system of Richter's Lexikon because of its greater simplicity and its applicability with equal fitness to inorganic as well as to organic compounds.

ABBREVIATIONS USED IN CHEMICAL ABSTRACTS

[α] specific rotation	cond. conductivity ($[\alpha]_D^{20}$, for 20° and sodium light)	const. constant abs. absolute	contg. containing Ac acetyl (AcH, acetaldehyde; AcOH, acetic acid)	cor. corrected
a. c. alternating current	c. p. candle power addn. addition	c. P. chemically pure addnl. additional	crit. critical
alc. alcohol	cryst. crystalline (not crystallize)
alk. alkaline (not alkali)	crystd. crystallized alky. alkalinity	crystn. crystallization
Am. amyl	cu. m. cubic meter
amp. ampere(s)	d. density (d_{15} , specific gravity at 13° referred to water at 4°; d_{20}^{20} , at 20° referred to water at the same temperature)
amt. amount	d. c. direct current anhyd. anhydrous	decomn. decomposition
app. apparatus	deriv. derivative approx. approximate, approximately	det. determine
aq. aqueous	detd. determined assoc. associate(s)	detg. determining assocd. associated	detn. determination associ. association	dil. dilute
at. atomic (not atom)	diln. dilution
atm. atmosphere(s), atmospheric	dissoc. dissociate(s)
at. wt. atomic weight	dissocd. dissociated
av. average (except as a verb)	dissocn. dissociation
b. (followed by a figure denoting temperature) boils at, boiling at (similarly b_{15} , at 15 mm. pressure)	distd. distilled bacteriol. bacteriological	distg. distilling
b. p. boiling point	distn. distillation
B. t. u. British thermal unit(s)	elec. electric, electrical
Bu butyl (normal)	e. m. f. electromotive force
Bz benzoyl (BzH, benzaldehyde; BzOH, benzoic acid)	equil. equilibrium
cal. calorie(s)	equiv. equivalent calc. calculate	est. estimate calcd. calculated	estd. estimated calcg. calculating	estg. estimating calcn. calculation	estn. estimation
cc. cubic centimeter(s)	Et ethyl (H_5C_2O , ethyl ether)
c. d. current density	evap. evaporate chem. chemical (not chemistry)	evapd. evaporated
cm. centimeter(s)	evapg. evaporating coeff. coefficient	evapn. evaporation
com. commercial	examd. examined compd. compound	exang. examining compn. composition	examn. examination conc. concentrate	expt. experiment concd. concentrated	exptl. experimental concn. concentration	ext. extract extd. extracted

extg. extracting	parts per million extn. extraction	precipitate
f. p. freezing point	precipitated
ft. foot, feet	pptg. precipitating
g. gram(s)	pptn. precipitation
h. p. horsepower	Pr propyl
hr. hour	prep. prepare
in. inch(es)	prepd. prepared inorg. inorganic	prepg. preparing insol. insoluble	prepn. preparation kg. kilogram(s)	qual. qualitative
kw. kilowatt(s)	quant. quantitative
l. liter(s)	recrystd. recrystallized
lab. laboratory	resp. respectively pound(s)	r. p. m. revolutions per minute
m. meter(s); also (followed by a figure denoting temperature) melts at, melt- ing at	sapon. saponification manuf. manufacture	sapond. saponified math. mathematical	sapong. saponifying
max. maximum	sat. saturate
Me methyl (MeOH, methanol)	satd. saturate mech. mechanical	satg. saturation
mfg. manufacturing	satn. saturation
mg. milligram	sec. second(s)
min. minimum (also minute(s))	sep. separate mixt. mixture	sepd. separated
mol. molecule, molecular	sepg. separating
mol. wt. molecular weight	sepn. separation
m. p. melting point	sol. soluble n index of refraction (n_D^{20} , for 20° and sodium light)	soln. solution
N normal	soly. solubility neg. negative	sp. specific
no. number	sp. gr. specific gravity
org. organic	sq. cm. square centimeter(s)
p. d. potential difference	sym. symmetrical pharmacol. pharmacological	temp. temperature phys. physical	U. S. P. United States Pharmacopeia physiol. physiological	v. volt(s)
pos. positive	vol. volume (not volatile) powd. powdered	w. watt(s) w. p. c. watts per candle
	wt. weight
